...E YOUTH TOO AMBITIOUS

Modern boys and girls are too ...nding in their rush to become ...sters in the fields of business and ...e professions, declared a director ...t employment counseling service ...dicated to aid boys and girls to ...t a proper start in the business ...rld.

It seems that youngsters are "un...nding to start in the ...ost glamorous jobs' and work their way up. ...ersten not ... Lazy ... ...n $5,000 a year one month after graduation from high school is often a rude shock to our modern teen-ager."

The counsellor reports, however, that once the teen-ager is convinced of the proper course to follow in connection with employment, he becomes ready to dig in as a clerk, a messenger, a stenographer, or office-boy, and "work his way up in the American tradition."

The "ambition" of a teen-ager is largely the product of modern education, and an environment that includes many examples of "from rags to riches," in easy lessons, it is no wonder that many average boys and girls get the idea that money can be made in bales, overnight.

The success tag which most communities put upon the man who makes big money in short time, without any discriminating judgment as to the methods involved, is enough to make the average teen-ager believe that the volumes of cash is almost everything that counts. This explains, in part, the failure of some teen-ager to appreciate the value of character in connection with economic effort and, in their in-experience, they sometimes conclude that the success stories are the rule and not the exception in the lives of human beings.
